

Have your say: Who are your favourite academic tweeters?

by Blog Admin

August 24, 2011

Many academics have embraced social media as a tool for networking and disseminating research. Inspired by the overwhelming response we received following a call for twitter tips, we're asking you to suggest your favourite academics on twitter.

The LSE Impact of Social Sciences blog is preparing to launch an essential, downloadable guide to tweeting for impact.

The guide is aimed at academics, researchers and education professionals who are eager to maximise their research impact with the social media tool, twitter. Including tips on getting started with tweeting, building your twitter network and disseminating research, our twitter guide will be a valuable resource for those new to social networking as well as more experienced tweeters.

The guide will be available to download for free as a PDF next week.

Before launching the guide, we want you to tell us who your favourite academic tweeters are and we'll include a selection of them in the guide. Which academic shares the most interesting posts? Whose 140-character debates make you think? Which academic's commentary do you follow daily?

We'll provide a full list of all those recommended on the blog so make sure you include yourself and all those whose tweets you can't live without.

Get in the spirit and tweet us your recommendations @LSEImpactBlog, email impactofsocialsciences@lse.ac.uk or leave your comments here.

Related posts:

1. Share your Twitter top tips for a new 'how-to' guide for academics on the merits of academic tweeting
2. Becoming a Networked Researcher – using social media for research and researcher development
3. The use of social media in higher education can be a positive step towards bridging the digital divide, but it is not a fail-safe measure
4. Running a successful academic blog can make you feel like a rock star: authenticity and narrative are essential for forging your own digital identity
5. Academics and universities should embrace blogging as a vital tool of academic communication and impact

