Here is a weekend treat for you. We are so used to online video now thanks to YouTube and the rest, that it's refreshing to see some internet journalism that uses still pictures and sound to even better effect. Please check out this wonderful photographic/sound essay about Carrie Johnson. She is one of only two dozen women who work as 'Firejumpers' for the US Fire Service – they literally parachute in to the wilderness of the North West to put out fires. Congrats to Anne Medley of NewWest.Net for showing how to combine simple 'old media' formats (stills photography and audio) online. Unpretentious grass-roots American documentary journalism of the highest order.
